that I have committed an error in speaking to you of the Memorial about which Mr. H. and others are intrusting themselves in London - it was not to be named in the United States until I believe it is presented there - so please to be so kind as to forget all about it and as it may probably ^{be} some time in progress, it will come upon you with all the freshness of novelty.

This has been a grand day for by those who have listened to it, and two others for Miss Fugate. There was a rush to my bed room after breakfast, and all America was filed upon me without money, but it was not done in the spirit of bondage, but of true rejoicing.

I was delighted to hear of you all again and to picture you after an ideal fashion of my own at your various posts. I hope your flight to New York has been beneficial to your brother, and that his cold was only a temporary evil, so that your anxiety on his account is not increased. It made me a little low to think that Mr. Fisher was not on his homeward way and consequently my chance of getting your letter a remote one, but I say to myself, patience and hope.

Mr Estlin and Miss Ketchum go to morning to meet Miss ~~Stark~~ Church at Mr. Chapman's the latter is indulging the hope of seeing Mrs L. though she is "very poorly" as usual on Wednesday evening she goes to drink tea for the second time with Mrs Schimmelgumich, so she must have made a very favorable impression to be so honored.

People are sending in money fast to the collectors for the purchase of the slave family, ^{I anticipated} it will soon be obtained, but the "right and wrong" of it will be thoroughly canvassed, and Mr Estlin thinks it will be the last time it will be easily procured - He is going to get letters into various papers to show the matter in its true light - and direct out the S. sympathy into a just channel. In the Argo led out by two articles have lately appeared from the Jewish Chronicle - capital ones on slavery countenanced by the bible. They stout the idea, show clearly wherein the difference lies, and give the Pres. and S. Ds. some wholesome advice very much to the point.
